Revolt in the Petit Trianon

In a recent display of its attractions for the fall season, the CBS network gathered together its heavenly bodies from nearby golf courses, movie studios, swimming pools and massage parlors and allowed them to mix briefly with newsmen, waiters, and hawkeye girls in the Petit Trianon.

Unchained Words

No sooner had the assembled hocked down the aspice than there was a tinkling of the glassware and a whistling in the public address system and there was Art Linkletter—heaven forbid—preparing to throw a few unchained words in our direction.

"Ladies and gentlemen we have about 200 famous people to introduce and I want you to hold your applause until they have all stood up or else we're going to get through the evening," said Linkletter, the king of the ladies' matinee hour.

At this, the groan increased to a roar. People continued to talk and the waters of the Petit Trianon grimly went about their tasks of serving the meal course.

"Ladies and gentlemen!" said Linkletter. "I am going to get through this if it kills me."

"First, there's that bright and witty man of many talents and charms, Steve Allen, and his lovely wife, Jayne Meadows!"

"Ladies and gentlemen! I must ask you to hold your applause or we will never get through the introductions!"

In fairness to Linkletter it must be said that he had an impossible task. The celebrity audience was tired and wanted to eat.

But he made the fatal error of allowing the inattention to ruffle him. It was a grim sight to see a professional turn amateur in front of his colleagues.

"If you don't want to be quiet, I'll stop. You can see by my tuxedo that I'm playing the reynound bus station later this evening (no laughs). And it would be a lot more fun than this."

Finally his introductions of the innocent (each followed by default applause) became more enid:

"Here's a guy who stole my stuff with kids and has managed to make a big thing of it all over the world—Danny Kaye!"

"And now the head of the Clamptett clan and the last living Republican in Hollywood—Buddy Ebsen!"

If there's one thing that Linkletter understands, it's money. "And now that great performer, Garry Moore. Garry is drinking Royal Crown Cola tonight because he owns Royal Crown Cola in Los Angeles!"

And then the final touch: "I've read the latest edition of Esquire Magazine you'll see that I have been included in an article on people who are above criticism called 'The Unknowables.' My picture is right next to the Pope's. Come out to the pool after the show and watch me walk on the water!" (Stunned silence.)

When the foolishness finally ground to a halt, Linkletter bowed out to such light applause that Garry Moore, the famous soft drink entrepreneur, jumped to the empty microphone for a few impromptu words of praise for the orator who had disappeared.

"If I could be anyone in the world," said Moore, "I would want to be Art Linkletter." The man across the table from me looked over and crossed his eyes ever so slightly.

Oh well, Marie Antoinette had trouble in the Petit Trianon, too.

STARS AND STRIPES FLY DAILY AT WHYN

President Lyndon B. Johnson recently proclaimed Tuesday, June 14 Flag Day, and at the same time urged display of the Stars and Stripes every day throughout the week.

To Klyer Lee, building superintendent of WHYN Television and Radio stations, this has been a daily ritual not as an obligation or part of his work, but rather based on his sincere patriotism.

Lee, a 20-year veteran of the Air Force, makes it a point to raise the flag each morning just at sunrise, according to strict military protocol. All that is missing in this ceremony is the sound of the bugle.

The unusual sight of the flag flying in the breeze before a business establishment could very well serve as a reminder to others, in the words of President Johnson, "It still symbolizes hope and promise to the oppressed people of the world...dedicated to principles of liberty, justice and equality for all."

London-Bound

Jonathan Winters, Fess Parker and Hugh O'Brien (left to right) will each be host of one program in the NBC Television Network's "London Palladium Show" summer color series seen on WWLP-Channel 22.

In addition to doing his own routines and teaming with Bentline, Winters also will work with the Schaller Brothers, a trampoline act that originally came from the United States. Other performers will be Neville King, a ventriloquist; Robert Harbin, an illusionist; and a line of 20 dancing Tiller Girls. Millicent Martin, the singer and dancer who is appearing on all six of NBC-TV's "London Palladium Shows" this summer, will sing "People" and, with eight boy dancers, "Sit Down, You're Rocking the Boat." In the show's finale Miss Martin will be joined by the full company as she sings "I Could Have Danced All Night" and "London."

Forty Fare

"The Rocking Sounds of Liverpool," a look at the city that spawned the Beatles and gave rise to the "beat" music that has become an international institution, will be presented on ABC News' "Discovery '66" today, Wednesday, WHYN-TV, Channel 40, 9 p. m.

Robert F. Kennedy On 'Issues and Answers'

Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, D-N. Y., will make his first nationwide half-hour news forum television appearance since his return from a four-country tour in Africa, on ABC News' television program, "Issues and Answers," today, WHYN-TV, 1.30 p. m. Interviewed live in Washington by ABC News State Department Correspondent John Seal and ABC News Capitol Hill Correspondent Bob Clark, the senator will be questioned about his Africa trip, particularly the effect of his much publicized "Brotherhood" speech in racially divided South Africa.

Gift Recipients at Farewell Party

Two prominent members of the staff of WHYN-TV, Channel 40, Lillian Rand, center, director of traffic, and Arthur Bouldin, left, better known as Major Art Bell of Adventures in Time, have recently resigned and were recipients of a sterling silver Paul Revere Bowl from Charles N. DeRose, general manager and vice-president at a farewell party given them at the studio.

Mrs. Rand, wife of Lt. Col. William J. Rand, is moving to Amarillo, Texas where her husband Col. Rand will be stationed at the Amarillo Air Force Base.
